For example when a mosquito bites someone, who has malaria, it sucks in some of the malaria germs. Later, when it bites someone; who is healthy, it passes the germs into him. If a healthy person washes in the same water, or uses the same towel, as someone who has trachoma - a disease which sends people blind; then the germ can pass to his eyes in the water or on the towel. Fortunately, we have good natural defences against many germs. Our bodies are made up of millions of very small cells, just as a building is made up of many stones or bricks. Some of those cells move about and swallow germs up to stop them from harming us. We also make special substances in our bodies which attack germs for us. Other substances are made inside our bodies when certain kind of germs attack us. These substances are called antibodies and each protect us against only one kind of germ.
